Research interests

My research interests span a broad range of topics focusing on contemporary English Language, British and North American Literature, Translation as well as the New Technologies and Media and the way they interact with literature, art and performance both in digital and in book form ("Epistolary Novels in the 21st-century We-Culture: recreating a genre", 2017). I have investigated short narratives (Samuel Beckett), novels (Douglas Coupland's) and e-novels (Matt Beaumont's e: A novel, 2000; and e Squared. A novel, 2010), plays (Harold Pinter and Samuel Beckett), manuscripts, online corpora ("Online edutainment videos: expert discourse and knowledge dissemination recontextualised in TED talks", 2015) applying various approaches and methodologies - i.e. Textual Analysis, Discourse Analysis, Literary Criticism, Translation Studies Theory, Corpus Analysis. Intermediality and remediation are production processes which I discussed focusing on the interaction of words and images relative to Douglas Coupland's Generation X ("La parola-immagine e l'immagine in parole: pubblicità, serie TV, musica, fumetti, pop art in Generation X di Douglas Coupland", 2015), comparing traditional epistolarity to e-novels and studying we-narratives. In the last years I have been involved into three main interdisciplinary research groups: the first, ARGEC (Atelier de recherche Gênois sur les écritures contemporaines), devoted to inter-, trans- and multimedial narratives ("The new technologies and the novel: re-coding narrative in book form" forthcoming in Recherches sémiotiques/Semiotic Inquiry). The second revolved around literature and the city - I contributed with a paper on Douglas Coupland's speculative fiction, now in the online journal Publif@rum (28: 2017) under the title: "Mappe 'aperte' nella narrativa speculativa di Douglas Coupland: dal centro al margine, dal dove al come, dall'io al noi" ("Open maps in Coupland's speculative narratives: from the centre to the margins, from the where to the how, from I to we"). Finally, most recently, in January 2018, I have been invited by the Principal Investigators, M. Prandi and M. Rossi (University of Genoa) to join an interlinguistic research group working on Metaphors (as a conceptual and structural typology) and on a new methodology to identify them above word level.
